RESEARCH conducted by researchers from the University of California, San Diego, and the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, has found that the use of a computer-based system to monitor and control the environment of a hospital room can reduce the risk of infection and improve patient outcomes. The study, published in the Journal of the American Medical Association, found that the use of the system, which is called "SmartRoom," resulted in a 50% reduction in the number of infections and a 25% reduction in the length of stay for patients. The system uses sensors to monitor the room's temperature, humidity, and air quality, and can automatically adjust the room's environment to maintain optimal conditions for patient care. The researchers also found that the system was easy to use and that patients and staff were satisfied with its performance. The study suggests that the use of SmartRoom could be a valuable tool for hospitals to improve patient care and reduce costs.
