

SITEX FL

1. Description

The SITEX FL couplings are designed for optimising the connections between Diesel engines and hydraulic pumps (hydrostatic transmissions). They consist of a Polyamide flange reinforced by fibreglass with high mechanical strength and dimensional stability with temperature, complete with a toothed steel hub. The special teeth allow SITEX FL couplings to compensate for small misalignments thus avoiding wear. The steel-polyamide coupling allows maintenance free continuous operation.

2. Main characteristics and advantages

Minimum dimensions: the whole coupling length is usually installed inside the engine housing, reducing the axial dimension to a minimum. In such a way: less tools are required for fitting.

Axial misalignments: the hub teething can move freely axially inside the polyamide flange avoiding axial forces which may arise on the pump shaft.

Heat stability: the special fibreglass polyamide flange is designed to operate in internal combustion engine environments without air cooling and up to 140° C.

Maintenance free: the SITEX FL joints are maintenance and lubrication free.

Quick assembling: the blind assembly makes the SITEX FL assembly and inspection very fast.

Angular misalignments: the special teeth allow angular misalignment correction, protecting the bearings against angular forces.

Stiffness: the SITEX FL couplings are stiff couplings: operations will be torsionally vibration free.

The SITEX FL couplings are used in connections between the flywheels of the internal combustion engines and: hyd-pumps, rotating pistons and compressor blades.
