■ William Zinsser

William Zinsser was born in New York City in 1922. After graduating from Princeton University, he worked for the New York Herald Tribune, first as a feature writer and later as its drama editor and film critic. Zinsser has also taught writing at Yale University and has served as general editor of the Book-of-the-Month Club. He is currently the series editor for The Writer's Craft Series, which publishes talks by writers and is cosponsored by the Book-of-the-Month Club and the New York Public Library. Zinsser's own published works cover many aspects of contemporary American culture, but he is best known as the author of lucid and accessible books about writing, including Writing with a Word Processor (1983), Writing to Learn (1988), and On Writing Well (Sixth Edition, 1998), a perennial favorite for college writing courses as well as the general population. In the following piece, he reminds us, as did Henry David Thoreau before him, to "simplify, simplify." As you read each paragraph, notice the clarity with which Zinsser presents its main idea, and note how he develops that idea with adequate and logically related supporting information. You should also note that he follows his own advice about simplicity.
