

The Digestive System

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food is broken down mechanically in the mouth or physically through a series of chemical reactions and enzymatic processes, allowing nutrients to be absorbed. The digestive system also removes undigested components and waste to be excreted as the stool in the gastrointestinal tract.

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, digested material enters the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, which is connected to the pancreas by the duodenal papilla. The pancreas produces pancreatic juice, which is secreted into the duodenum. The pancreas also produces insulin, a hormone that regulates blood sugar levels. The liver produces bile, which is secreted into the gallbladder.

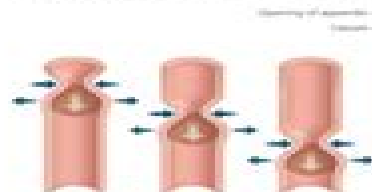

Layers of large intestine

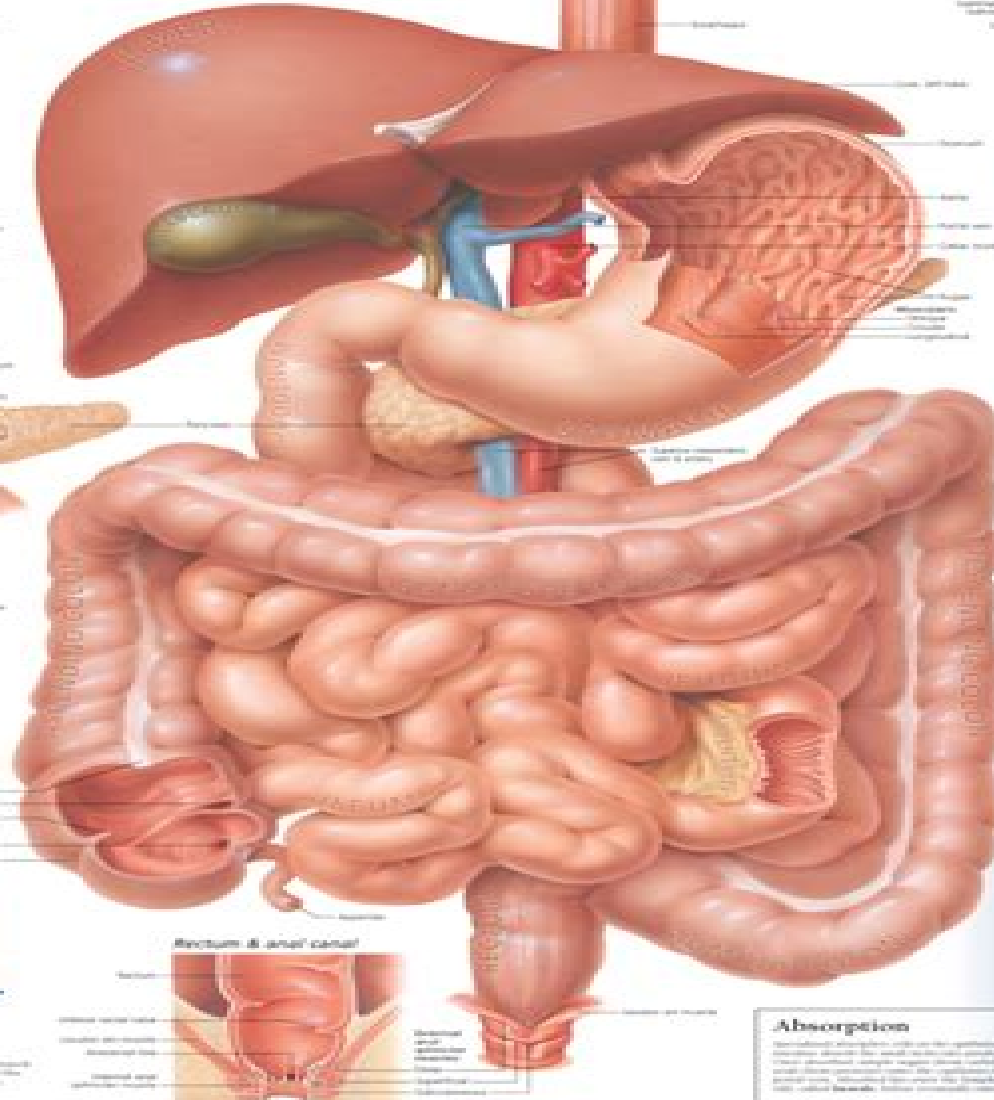

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the ascending colon, the transverse colon, the descending colon, the sigmoid colon, and the rectum. The large intestine is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the undigested food, forming stool.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful muscular contractions called peristalsis. These contractions move the material forward and the food is broken down and absorbed.

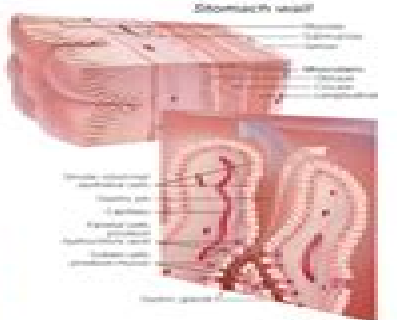

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing the food breaks it into smaller pieces, making it easier to swallow. Saliva, produced by the salivary glands, moistens the food and helps in the digestion of carbohydrates. The salivary glands are located in the mouth and produce saliva, which is secreted into the mouth.

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for storing and mixing food with gastric juices. The stomach is divided into two main parts: the cardia, which is the entrance to the stomach, and the pylorus, which is the exit. The stomach wall is composed of several layers of muscle, which contract to mix the food with gastric juices.

Small intestine

The small intestine is a long, coiled tube that is responsible for the majority of the digestion and absorption of nutrients. It is divided into three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. The small intestine is covered in a network of blood vessels called the intestinal villi, which increase the surface area for absorption.

Absorption

The process of absorption involves the transport of the nutrients from the small intestine into the blood and lymph. The nutrients are absorbed through the intestinal villi, which are covered in a network of blood vessels. The absorbed nutrients are then transported to the rest of the body.
