Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 women, 40-55 years of age, who were sedentary and had no history of cardiovascular disease. They were randomly assigned to either a walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of walking for 30 minutes, 3 times per week, at a pace of 3.0 miles per hour. The control group was instructed to continue with their sedentary lifestyle. The study was conducted over a 12-week period. The physical health outcomes measured were heart rate, blood pressure, and body mass index (BMI). The psychological health outcomes measured were anxiety, depression, and self-esteem. The results of the study showed that the walking program had a significant positive effect on all of the measured outcomes. The walking program group had significantly lower heart rates, blood pressures, and BMIs compared to the control group. The walking program group also had significantly lower levels of anxiety and depression, and significantly higher levels of self-esteem compared to the control group. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can have a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
