

BRANCHING SCENARIOS

Basic Branch Plan

When a project uses a development lifecycle, the development team creates a stable baseline for the code. The development team then branches off the baseline to create a new branch for development. The development team then merges the new branch back into the baseline when the development is complete.

Standard Branch Plan

The standard branch plan is a more complex branching strategy. It involves creating a baseline for the code, and then branching off the baseline to create a new branch for development. The development team then merges the new branch back into the baseline when the development is complete. This plan is more complex than the basic branch plan, but it provides more control over the development process.

Advanced Branch Plan

The advanced branch plan is a highly complex branching strategy. It involves creating a baseline for the code, and then branching off the baseline to create a new branch for development. The development team then merges the new branch back into the baseline when the development is complete. This plan is the most complex of the three, but it provides the most control over the development process.
