Exploratory Time Series Analysis of Apprehensions and Linewatch Hours on the Southwest Border Derekh Cornwell,2010-11 Most researchers utilize publicly available data on border apprehensions and linewatch hours which serve as proxies for the flow of unauthorized migration and the underlying enforcement effort respectively A standard assumption of most researchers is that apprehensions are a function of linewatch hours. It is conceivable, however, that linewatch hours may also be a function of apprehensions. Although some studies recognize the possibility of a reverse relationship, the implied hypothesis, namely that apprehensions predict linewatch hours, has not been tested. This paper fills the gap by providing a formal time series analysis of the historical relationship between monthly apprehensions and linewatch hours between 1963 and 2004. Collegiate News and Views, 1974. Accounting, Paul D.
