How do we calculate productivity?	By dividing the total output (measured in Quantity) per period over the number of employees.
How is City State Policy measuring Productivity?	Measure how successfully a company's produces output by comparing that amount of output to the number of inputs (workers) to produce that output.
Why is this descriptive?	City State starts by measuring government productivity without accounting for the other productivity (and on later years).
How does this administrative data help us in all other, understanding from economic perspective?	This administrative data is only a descriptive measure of productivity. It is not a measure of productivity. It is relatively low, but it is not the only measure of productivity. There is a lot of information that is not included in this data.

4

What has happened to productivity in the world's largest economies since the 1970s?	There has been a significant decline in productivity in the world's largest economies since the 1970s. This is due to a number of factors, including technological change, globalization, and demographic shifts.
What is happening around the world with the world's largest economies since the 1970s?	There has been a significant decline in productivity in the world's largest economies since the 1970s. This is due to a number of factors, including technological change, globalization, and demographic shifts.
Why do you expect to see technological innovation to be the main driver of productivity in the future?	Technological innovation is the main driver of productivity in the future because it allows for the creation of new products and services that are more efficient and effective than those that exist today.
What do you think is necessary for maintaining productivity in the future?	Maintaining productivity in the future will require a combination of factors, including continued investment in research and development, a focus on education and training, and a commitment to innovation and entrepreneurship.
