

Chapter 7

A look at a fraction unit

Now, let's look at a fraction unit.

Naturally, before teaching this unit, teachers would have agreed on what they would expect their students to know, recognize, and be able to do. They would have identified approximately how long it would take to teach the unit, and what would be tested. Teachers should also have a very good idea of what they expect their students' notebooks to look like before they begin instruction. If the teacher does not have a good visualization of the notes students should be taking, then chances are the students won't have an idea either. Let's begin.

Fractions and their Equivalent Forms

Little kids use the concept of a fraction long before we ever formalize their knowledge in school. Watching little kids share a candy bar or a bottle of soda indicates they have a feeling for what will soon be called a fraction.

Can you imagine having a son or daughter come home and slice a cake like this, then eat the largest piece.

When you got home and saw most of the cake gone, you might have asked; who ate all the cake? If someone were to retort, I only had one piece, the biggest, you may have wanted to make him wear the rest. But, you decided that in the future you would pre-cut the cake into equal pieces. That way you would know how much cake one piece would be, hence you introduced the notion of denominator.

A classroom teacher would give a few more examples in setting the stage and developing the concept. Drawing pictures and labeling will be of especial help to non English speakers.

A fraction is part of a whole unit, it's made up of two parts, a numerator and a denominator. The denominator tells you how many EQUAL parts make one whole unit (cake), the numerator tells you how many of those parts you have.
