

Food and Energy

Guide for Reading

- What are the six nutrients needed by the body?
- What is the function of water in the body?

3

Your body converts the foods you eat into nutrients. Nutrients are the substances in food that provide the raw materials and energy the body needs to carry out all the essential processes. There are six kinds of nutrients necessary for human health—carbohydrates, fats, proteins, vitamins, minerals, and water.

The amount of energy released by nutrients can be measured in units called calories. One calorie is the amount of energy needed to raise the temperature of one gram of water by one Celsius degree. Scientists use the term Calorie with a capital C, to measure energy in foods. One Calorie is the same as 1,000 calories. The more Calories a food has, the more energy it contains.

Carbohydrates are nutrients composed of carbon, oxygen, and hydrogen. They are a major source of energy. Carbohydrates are also a source of materials to make parts of cells. Carbohydrates are either simple or complex. Simple carbohydrates are sugars. One sugar, glucose, is the major source of energy for your body's cells. Complex carbohydrates are made up of many sugar molecules linked together in a chain. Starch is a complex carbohydrate found in some plant foods. Fiber is a complex carbohydrate found in plant foods. Fiber keeps the digestive system functioning properly.

Like carbohydrates, fats are high-energy nutrients that are composed of carbon, oxygen, and hydrogen. They contain twice as much energy as an equal amount of carbohydrates. Fats are either unsaturated or saturated. Unsaturated fats are usually liquid at room temperature. Most oils are unsaturated fats. Saturated fats are usually solid at room temperature. Cholesterol is a waxy, fatlike substance found only in animal products. Large amounts of cholesterol and saturated fats can cause heart disease.

Proteins are nutrients that contain nitrogen as well as carbon, hydrogen, and oxygen. They are needed for tissue growth and repair and for chemical reactions in the cell. Proteins are made up of small units called amino acids that are linked together to form protein molecules.

The body also needs small amounts of vitamins and minerals. Vitamins act as helper molecules in a variety of chemical reactions within the body. Minerals are nutrients that are not made by living things. We obtain minerals by eating plant foods or animals that have eaten plants.

Water is the most important nutrient because the body's vital processes—including chemical reactions such as the breakdown of nutrients—take place in water. People cannot live without fresh water.
