

The Test of Narrative Language (TNL) is a comprehensive measure of a student's ability to understand and tell stories. Children use narrative language to create stories and descriptions of events in their daily lives. Comprehending and producing narratives require the development of phonologic, orthographic, syntactic, semantic, and pragmatic language. Narrative comprehension is the ability to understand narratives produced by others. Moving from written to spoken or strings of sentences to a story requires that listeners construct their understanding of the narratives that are being spoken with their general knowledge of the topic in order to understand and remember the main plot. Narrative production requires an individual to tell stories using sentences or paragraphs that reflect coherent and believable characters, characters' motivations, and sequence of events. Children start with a general representation of the whole story and then break it down into paragraphs or individual sentences, words and phrases that best express the meanings associated with the whole text. These tasks require children to be able to apply their knowledge of language quickly and efficiently.

This test measures comprehension and production of expository speech and oral stories. A student's narrative ability is comprehending and telling stories in standard to three levels: (a) with no picture cues, (b) with five sequential pictures, and (c) with a single picture. Standard scores between 8-12 are considered average and an index score between 90-110 is considered to be within the average range.

Narrative Comprehension Standard Score	Oral Narrative Standard Score	Narrative Language Ability Index
13 (high average)	8 (low average)	100 (average)

Test results indicated that Student's Narrative Language Ability Index of 100, indicated that his narrative language skills fall within the average range when compared to same age peers in the area of narrative comprehension and oral narratives, with narrative comprehension being higher.

When Student listened to stories, Student was able to recall many of the events that occurred in sequence, identify the problems in the story, identify the setting, and recall specific names of people.
