All Together Now

by Barbara Jordan

Born in Houston, Barbara Jordan was the first African American woman to serve in the Texas state legislature. In 1972, she was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives. She was known as an inspiring speaker and a champion of civil rights. She gave this speech at the 1992 Democratic National Convention.

- 1 When I look at race relations today I can see that some positive changes have come about. But much remains to be done, and the answer does not lie in more legislation. We have the legislation we need; we have the laws. Frankly, I don't believe that the task of bringing us all together can be accomplished by government. What we need now is soul force—the efforts of people working on a small scale to build a truly tolerant, harmonious society. And parents can do a great deal to create that tolerant society.
- 2 We all know that race relations in America have had a very rocky history. Think about the 1960s when Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., was in his heyday¹ and there were marches and protests against segregation and discrimination. The movement culminated² in 1963 with the March on Washington.
- 3 Following that event, race relations reached an all-time peak. President Lyndon B. Johnson pushed through the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which remains the fundamental piece of civil rights legislation in this century. The Voting Rights Act of 1965 ensured that everyone in our country could vote. At last, black people and white people seemed ready to live together in peace.
- 4 But that is not what happened. By the 1990s the good feelings had diminished. Today the nation seems to be suffering from compassion fatigue, and issues such as race relations and civil rights have never regained momentum.
- 5 Those issues, however, remain crucial. As our society becomes more diverse, people of all races and backgrounds will have to learn to live together. If we don't think this is important, all we have to do is look at the situation in Bosnia³ today.
- 6 How do we create a harmonious society out of so many kinds of people? The key is tolerance—the one value that is indispensable in creating community.

¹heydays: period of greatest popularity and success; prime

²culminated: reached the highest point

³Bosnia: From 1992 to 1995, the former Yugoslavian republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina suffered from an ethnically motivated war.

During the Bosnian conflict, a campaign of "ethnic cleansing" led to the deaths of thousands of people.
