

Students Interview Principal Sabin Loveland

Fourth-graders at Litchfield Intermediate School, CharlesMac Doberty, Celia Holtman, Bria Langill, Michaela Makuc, and Carter Ulrich-Trozzi had the opportunity to interview Sabin Loveland, who was the principal of Wamogo High School before being named the new principal of Litchfield Intermediate School and Warren School.

Michaela: Thank you for meeting with us for this interview today. Can you begin by telling us a little information about yourself?

Mr. Loveland: Thank you for having me. Professionally, this is my 13th year as a principal. Before I went to Wamogo, I was Principal of a brand new school that I was given the opportunity to build. It is called the Global Experience Magnet School, Grades 6-12, middle/high school. We built this design so students would have experiences to go around the state, the country and even the world. Students learned how to be citizens throughout that time, how to be impactful to their community in middle school and how to have a bigger effect on a national level as high school students. Students were able to participate in Habitat for Humanity as juniors and were able to take a trip across the country to help build homes for people in need. Then, in their senior year, they traveled to one of our partner schools in China, Costa Rica, South Africa, France, or Ireland. We had partnerships all over the world. So that was my previous experience for about six years, and then I moved on to Wamogo, where I have been for the past seven years. I have absolutely loved learning more about Litchfield, Warren, Morris, and Goshen. I had an excellent time there as well.
