Frogs vs. Toads

Many people think frogs and toads are exactly the same, but they actually have a lot of differences too. Frogs and toads are both amphibians, which means they are cold-blooded vertebrates. They spend some time on land and in water but, toads live mostly on land and frogs live mostly in the water. Frogs and toads both lay eggs, but they lay their eggs differently. A toad will lay their eggs in a long chain while frogs lay their eggs in clusters.

Have you ever touched a frog or a toad? If you have, you will feel a difference! A frog has very smooth, wet skin that usually has more color to it. On the other hand, toads usually have very dry and bumpy skin that is often brown. Not only do they feel different, but they have a lot of physical differences too. Frogs have slim bodies with very long legs. Unlike, toads that have stout, or solid bodies with short legs.
