

NONCONTINGENT REINFORCEMENT

Noncontingent reinforcement (NCR) involves the delivery of a reinforcer independent and regardless of the performance of a specific behavior.

OVERVIEW

A noncontingent reinforcer approach aims to reduce problem behaviors by providing alternative sources of reinforcement, without directly addressing the root cause of the undesired behavior. By delivering the reinforcer on a fixed schedule or at random intervals, noncontingent reinforcement can minimize the likelihood of occurrence of a problem behavior.

EXAMPLES

- Sitting Next to the Teacher: Letting a student sit next to the teacher gives the child continuous attention, eliminating their need to engage in disruptive behavior to gain attention.
- Designated Time: A teacher can set aside a specific period of time to work with a student to give them the extra attention they usually seek by being disruptive.
