

So, how are clouds made?

The Skypelogo is constructed from a series of circles and following that lead, our clouds are to be constructed with the same process.

Circles make the cloud. You choose any size and placement and shape but make sure it looks... cloudish.

Circles good, ellipses bad. Don't use an ellipse to construct a cloud, no less than rounds and circles, just the old logo.

Note: As guidelines only, don't use it and as guidelines for logo, make the instructions a guide for the one... again?

Seriously though, it should still look like a cloud... or at least, cloudish.

We see that difficult, but to ease you through what you're getting at, we have some examples below of good clouds and, well, badish ones.

01 They don't get better than this. Clouds with a nice balance between big and small circles are one.

02 Not huge in this way it is. It doesn't need redefining. If you're in luck within a cloud, do not phrase the logo over shapes.

03 Looked clouded! Unless they are part of the logo, clouds shouldn't have straight edges.

04 The cloud clouds, not flowers. There's a fine line between what looks like a cloud (good) and flowers or other (badish).

05 / 06 The don't do neither. Just because you think to use circles doesn't mean they have to at all be the same size, you can mix it up.
