Before starting your computer for the first time, it is recommended that you format your hard disk to optimize space and speed. Formatting is a process of organizing storage cells on a disk. The formatted disk is better organized and working more efficiently. Your computer cannot do this for you. In some cases, formatting may be necessary to remove viruses or other malicious software. Formatting may also be necessary to remove data from a hard disk. Formatting is irreversible. Once you format a hard disk, the data on it is lost forever. If you have any data on your hard disk that you want to keep, you should back it up before formatting. If you are not sure whether you should format your hard disk, consult the documentation that came with your computer or contact your computer manufacturer for more information.
