Access control systems are designed to restrict entry to a building or area to authorized personnel only. These systems can be implemented using a variety of methods, including keycards, biometrics, and physical locks. The most common method is the use of keycards, which are issued to authorized personnel and used to unlock doors. Biometric systems, such as fingerprint or facial recognition, are also becoming increasingly popular. Physical locks, such as those using a combination of a key and a lock, are still widely used but are generally considered less secure than electronic systems.
