

Notebooks are very essential for the development of writing skills. Writing skills help students to communicate effectively through writing coupled with enhancing handwriting neatness. Education begins at the early childhood education level. The student is taught the basic skills, which include writing skills. However, writing skills develop gradually as a student progresses to advanced stages of education.

Therefore, eliminating school notebooks at early stages of education would deny students the opportunity to improve their handwriting in terms of neatness and speed, which are necessary elements in writing skills (Weaver & Nilson, 2005). School notebooks are easily affordable and they need no maintenance costs, thus they are more practical for learning purposes of people with low income.

The education system should have cost-effective mechanisms that enable the majority of people to afford it with less or no strain. Hence, it is very important to ensure that every student can easily find the money for the basic learning requirements in order to eliminate chances of some individuals being left behind in the process (Barak et al., 2006).

School notebooks are reasonably priced for the majority of students and they do not require any power supply to access their contents, as in the case with laptops. Therefore, the world is yet to adopt notebook laptops in schools in order to eliminate school notebooks, as some students will be disadvantaged by the high costs of buying and maintaining notebook laptops.

Notebook Laptops

Notebook laptops are expensive devices for learning in terms of their affordability and maintenance. Notably, children are quick learners and they should grasp the basic skills for e-learning very easily. However, they love exploration and thus they damage some devices in an effort to learn more about them. Therefore, the adoption of laptop notebooks faces a challenge of the high cost of maintenance and especially the repairing costs.

On the other hand, school notebooks that have been in use ever since the adoption of the education system during civilization do not face such challenges. This observation implies that students can be subjected to new rules to protect notebook laptops from getting damaged, and that will interfere with their normal habits (Weaver & Nilson, 2005).

Also, notebook laptops have security challenges that may have adverse effects on the education system. The adoption of notebook laptops will lead to the elimination of
