

Writing a Formal Research Paper in the Social Sciences

This handout provides guidelines for writing a formal research paper in the social sciences. Although it is a type of research paper, the process is not the same as writing a research paper for an English or history class. In fact, a formal research paper is much more similar to a formal lab report for a chemistry or biology class. The “research” in the title refers to conducted scientific research rather than the gathering of information. For psychology classes, one will typically write about a behavior observation, a survey, or an experiment. Sociology (and occasionally psychology) includes interviews as well. The usual format for a social science research paper is APA; however, always follow the instructor’s guidelines on formatting.

Note. For detailed information about social science research, visit the Research Methods Knowledge Base.

General Tips

- ❖ Be concise. Scientific writing often requires a lot of information, and it is important to relay this information in a detailed but straightforward manner. The research should be presented as clearly as possible, without excess wordiness or repetition. Always stay focused and on-point.
- ❖ Write in the third person. Avoid using the first person, such as “I” or “we,” when discussing research procedure. For example, rather than writing, “I surveyed 35 participants,” it is better to write, “The survey was administered to 35 participants.” The focus should stay on the research, and using the first person can make it appear more like a personal narrative. This type of writing may seem awkward at first, so try to pay close attention to the wording throughout the paper.
- ❖ Use correct verb tenses. Students are often unsure of whether to use the past or present verb tense when writing about research. There are a couple of general rules to follow regarding verb tense usage:
 - Since the study has already been conducted, discuss it in the past tense. For instance, one could say, “It was predicted that...” or “The observation was conducted...”
 - Since the theories and current research paper still exist, discuss them in the present tense. For example, one could say, “research shows that...” or “according to Bandura, children are more likely to show aggression when...”
