Writing Portfolio For The Past Semester

Over the semester, we have gone through several learning practices and gained different writing skills that mostly I did not know about. At the beginning of the semester, I believed that my writing was good. I was able to and possessed the skills to structure a regular sentence, paragraph and form a basic argument while at the same time providing what I thought to be reasonable evidence to present the argument. The evidence provided was also supported with citations from researched sources as per the topic under consideration. Also, I was able to present my ideas with understandable grammar, with perceived mastery gained over a long period and which enabled my writing skills albeit appreciable for a novice writer. Since the start of the course, however, I have gained more skills that have allowed me to be a better writer than ever before. Some of these were discussed in this portfolio.

In actuality, while I could write sufficiently well for the average article writer, there were several areas where my writing skills were limited. One of those areas is the creation of a credible argument. While I was able to draft a basic argument using the little knowledge I had in its construction, my knowledge in the presentation of the main ideas and construction of a formidable article was mostly just basic. I was able for example to form and structure paragraphs touching on the topic of the research, but vaguely since I could not provide enough details to drive the research, which is a necessity in the construction of a workable and convincing researched article. Over the course, however, I have gained an enhanced understanding of the techniques to create a sensible scholarly argument as well as incorporating evidence from different sources, primary, secondary and otherwise in the presentation. Also, I learned how to analyze the context of an argument in an article, making comparisons, rhetorical strategies and deducing the significance as in the CR 2 exercise.

Another area where my skills have improved as compared to the beginning of the semester is the understanding of genre conventions. In the CR 3 exercise on Audience and Genre, I was able to improve and hone my skills in Travel writing. First I was able to identify where my skills fell short of the required standards. Due to the shortcomings, I discovered in travel writing; I found several areas that I had to improve to design a quality travel paper. One of these is the construction of a body paragraph. I realized I needed to improve on the structure to present my ideas more precisely. I also found that my introductions were short of the required threshold as well as the thesis construction and relation to the topic of interest. Also, I found that I needed to improve my grammar to present a professionally written piece with clarity.

Furthermore, by analyzing the way different writers structured and presented their arguments, I have been able to pick out the key areas that elicit a response and create a connection with the reader. This understanding has prompted me to be more creative in writing, a skill that I have also applied to other fields of writing other than travel writing. My understanding of the key elements to include has made me more keen to details outside the WR3B. An example of this improvement is the RIP 2 Exercise, where I was able to write travel accounts of the same tour using three different perspectives, a sophisticated and adventurous, rude and insensitive and a carefree and fun-loving
