Abstract

Despite the crucial role of vocabulary in foreign language acquisition, little is known about its influence on speaking and writing development from self-regulated learning concept. Thus, by employing a path analysis, this study examines the influence of vocabulary acquisition through self-regulated learning on beginner ($N = 215$) and intermediate ($N = 195$) students' speaking and writing development at Walailak University, Thailand. The findings suggest significant paths from vocabulary acquisition to students' speaking and writing development, but noting the influence of proficiency level. These findings contribute to the development of research in vocabulary acquisition and self-regulated learning with regards to speaking and writing development.

The vocabulary acquisition in this study involves explicit instruction in vocabulary learning that has been found effective in

Lee, 2013-10-08 A volume on second language acquisition theory and pedagogy is at the same time a mark of progress and a bit of an anomaly The progress is shown by the fact that the two disciplines have established themselves as areas of study not only distinct from each other but also different from linguistic theory This was not always the case at least not in the United States The anomaly results from the fact that this book deals with the relationship between L2 theory and pedagogy despite the conclusion that there is currently no widely accepted theory of SLA Grouped into five sections the papers in this volume consider questions about L2 theory and pedagogy at the macro level from the standpoint of the L2 setting consider input in terms of factors which are internal to the learner examine the question of external factors affecting the input such as the issue of whether points of grammar can be explicitly taught deal with questions of certain complex linguistic behaviors and the various external and social variables that influence learners and discuss issues surrounding the teaching of pronunciation
