

Find my Data (Number Edition)

Internet Safety Game

This game will help you to think carefully about how to get a secret piece of data with the least number of questions. Your teacher might show you how to play first.

How many questions will you have to ask to find the secret number?

Instructions for playing in a group

1. One person is in, the rest of the group will take turns asking the questions.
2. The person that is in must write down a number between 1 and 100 on a piece of paper or in another way that cannot be changed or seen by the rest of the group.
3. One at a time, students in the group will take turns thinking of a number then asking the person that is in if that is their number.
4. The person that is in can only answer with 'higher', 'lower' or 'correct'. The goal is to ask the least amount of questions to guess the number correctly.

Instructions for playing in pairs

1. Both partners write down a number between 1 and 100 on a piece of paper or in another way that cannot be changed or seen by the other person.
2. One at a time, each person takes turns thinking of a number then asking the other person if that is their number.
3. The person being asked can only answer with 'higher', 'lower' or 'correct'.
4. The teacher circulates until someone asks for their partner's number. The goal is to ask the least amount of questions to guess the number correctly.

The lesson

Lots of people on the Internet are not who they say they are and they are often trying to get your personal information so that they can use it illegally. They will ask you questions to find out personal information like your age, your pet's name, what your favourite food is or your favourite music artist or song.

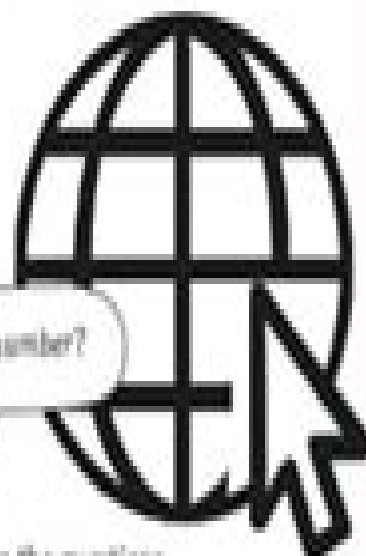

This information helps them to build a profile of you. They can then use this information to do things online, pretending to be you. Their goal is to ask the least amount of questions but get the most information. Do you know who is asking you questions when you are online? What are they asking you about? How can they use this information online?
