Introduction

This ungraded summary is for the teacher's use only and should not be given to students.

The story

Old Mr and Mrs White and their only son Herbert are a poor but happy family. One night they receive a visit from Mr White's old friend, Tom Morris.

Tom has been a soldier in India for many years. He shows them a monkey's paw which he says can grant three wishes, but the wishes do not bring happiness: his own wife and son died after he got the paw. Morris doesn't want to give the paw to his friend, but Mr White takes it.

After Morris has gone, Mr White wishes for £30,000. He feels the paw move in his hand but the money does not appear. Later, when he is alone, he sees a face at the window.

Next morning, there is still no money and Herbert goes to work as usual.

Later in the day, a stranger visits the house. He is from Maw and Meggins, the factory where Herbert works. Their son has fallen into some machinery and been killed. His body has been so horribly disfigured that the man advises the Whites against seeing it. He says the company wants to give them £30,000 in compensation for the loss of their son.

Three days later, the grief-stricken parents go to the nearby cemetery for their son's burial. About a week later, Mrs White wakes her husband in the night to ask for the paw, forcing him to wish for their son's return.

Back in bed, they hear noises outside the front door, and Mrs White runs downstairs, with Mr White calling after her not to go. He hears his wife cry out as she opens the door, but at the same time he has taken the paw and made the third and final wish: for his son to return to his grave. When he reaches his wife at the door, the street is empty.

Background to the story

William Wyndham Jacobs (1863–1943) was a writer of short stories and novels who also worked as a post office official from 1883–99. A popular author in his time, he is not much remembered today except for The Monkey's Paw, which he wrote in 1902. He was born in Wapping, in the East End of London, and wrote principally two kinds of short story: humorous stories about people who lived by the sea and boats, for example The Night-watchman; and horror stories like The Monkey's Paw. The Monkey's Paw was also dramatised for the stage.

The Monkey's Paw

The setting is Edwardian Britain (Edward VII reigned from 1901–1910) and the White family is portrayed as being from the skilled or semi-skilled working class, not very well off but 'respectable': Mr White is probably retired and Herbert has a steady job at the local factory. However, apart from a few references, for example to the 'Whites' address or to Morris's service in the Indian Army, reminding us of Britain's imperial presence in India at that time, the story could be imagined as taking place almost anywhere and at any time. This is no doubt why it continues to have such strong appeal today: Morris, for example, could easily be transposed into a tourist or traveller who has spent time in India.

There is an important moral lesson: Morris says that 'the old Indian (who gave the monkey's paw to his friend) wanted to teach us something – it's never good to want to change things.' So as with many good stories, we can approach it on two levels: both as an exciting and frightening tale, and as a story designed to make us reflect on the dangers of wishing too much for things to be other than as they are.
