Background

Neurons

The neuron is the cell of the nervous system capable of conducting and sending nerve impulses throughout the body. All neurons share the same basic structure, including a cell body, dendrites, and axons. The cell body, or soma, holds the nucleus and major organelles of the neuron. Nerve impulses are generated in the cell body and the branch-like fibers called dendrites that extend out from the cell body. Once the nerve impulse has been generated, it flows down the dendrite, through the cell body, and down the axon.

The axon is an extension of the neuron that contacts other neurons to propagate (send or continue) the nerve impulse to its target. The axon can branch several times at its end and these branches are called axon terminals. Many axons are also coated with a lipid covering called the myelin sheath, created by Schwann cells that are responsible for insulating and speeding up nerve impulses.

Just as there are many different types of cells in the body that each perform a specific function, there are also a wide variety of neurons. Neurons can be classified by shape, the direction they relay information, the neurotransmitter they produce, or the location in the body. The following table provides a few examples of different types and classifications of neurons.

<http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC2702002/figure/f2002002-fig01.png>

Classification of Neurons

Motor or Efferent Neurons	Transmit impulses from the CNS to glands and muscles throughout the body
Interneurons or Association Neurons	Only found in the spinal cord and brain; capable of relaying information between sensory, motor, and interneurons
Polarity of Axon and Dendrite
Unipolar Neuron	Dendrite and axon originate from the same location
Bipolar Neuron	Has a single dendrite and an axon at opposite ends of the cell body
Multipolar Neuron	Has more than two dendrites with an axon that projects from the cell body
Shape and Location in the Body
Purkinje	Huge neurons in the cerebellum
Basket	Found in the cortex and cerebellum
Pyramidal	Pyramid-shaped cell body
