Abstract

The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease between two groups of men who had been exposed to asbestos during their military service. The first group consisted of 600 men who had worked in the shipyard at the Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, New Hampshire, from 1947 to 1968. The second group consisted of 600 men who had worked in the shipyard at the Naval Shipyard, Groton, Connecticut, from 1947 to 1968. The results showed that the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease was significantly higher in the Portsmouth group than in the Groton group. This finding suggests that exposure to asbestos may be associated with an increased risk of developing coronary artery disease.
