

“THE BLACK CAT”

By Edgar Allan Poe (1809–1849)

First published in 1843

❶ For the most wildly at most homely narrative which I am about to pen, I neither expect nor solicit belief. Mad indeed would I be to expect it, in a tale where my very senses reject their own evidence. Yet, mad am I not;—and very surely do I not dream. But to-morrow I die, and to-day I would unburden my soul. My immediate purpose is to place before the world, plainly, succinctly, and without comment, a series of mere household events. In their consequences, these events have terrified—have tortured—have destroyed me. Yet I will not attempt to expound them. To me, they have presented little but horror—to many they will seem less terrible than banquets. Hereafter, perhaps, some intellect may be found which will reduce my phantasies to the commonplace—some intellect more calm, more logical, and far less excitable than my own, which will perceive, in the circumstances I detail with awe, nothing more than an ordinary succession of very natural causes and effects.

❷ From my infancy I was noted for the docility and humanity of my disposition. My tenderness of heart was even so conspicuous as to make me the jest of my companions. I was especially fond of animals, and was indulged by my parents with a great variety of pets. With these I spent most of my time, and never was so happy as when feeding and caressing them. This peculiarity of character grew with my growth, and, in my manhood, I derived from it one of my principal sources of pleasure. To those who have cherished an affection for a faithful and sagacious dog, I need hardly be at the trouble of explaining the nature or the intensity of the gratification thus derivable. There is something in the unselfish and self-sacrificing love of a brute, which goes directly to the heart of him who has had frequent occasion to test the paltry friendship and precarious fidelity of mere men.

1. Define “solicit.”

2. Does the narrator expect you to believe this story?

3. What will happen to the narrator tomorrow?

4. Define “banquets.”

5. Cite three pieces of textual evidence that indicates the narrator is unreliable.

6. Define “docility.”

7. Define “sagacious.”
