

Hydraulic Thrusters

The hydraulic thruster is a device that converts hydraulic energy into mechanical energy. It is used in various applications, such as in the marine industry for steering and propulsion of ships, and in the aerospace industry for attitude control of spacecraft.

The thruster consists of a main body and a cross-shaped arm. The main body is a cylinder that houses the hydraulic motor. The cross-shaped arm is attached to the motor and is used to generate thrust. The arm has four blades, each of which can be moved independently to provide thrust in different directions.
