

THE SUICIDES

In the original version of the play Shakespeare relies more on dramatic irony to keep the audience on their toes as Romeo dies before Juliet wakes up. Therefore he dies never knowing that Juliet is not really dead; the audience are the only people privy to the truth as the action unfolds on stage.

In Lohrmann's version he has Juliet wake up before Romeo actually takes the poison, but lies there admiring his beautiful face allowing him time to drink the poison before she makes it known she's awake. Therefore Romeo dies confused and knowing the terrible truth of his death being for nothing.

Which version of the Lovers' deaths do you feel is more dramatic? Why? Would you do anything differently if you were directing it?
