

Living Things Need Energy

Do you think you could survive on only water and vitamins? Eating food satisfies your hunger because it provides something you cannot live without—energy.

Living things need energy to survive. For example, black-tailed prairie dogs, which live in the grasslands of North America, eat grass and seeds to get the energy they need. Everything a prairie dog does requires energy. The same is true for the plants that grow in the grasslands where the prairie dogs live.

The Energy Connection

Organisms in a prairie or any community can be divided into three groups based on how they get energy. These groups are producers, consumers, and decomposers. Examine Figure 1 to see how energy passes through an ecosystem.

Producers

Organisms that use sunlight directly to make food are called producers. They do this by using a process called photosynthesis. Most producers are plants, but algae and some bacteria are also producers. Grasses are the main producers in a prairie ecosystem. Examples of producers in other ecosystems include cordgrass and algae in a salt marsh and trees in a forest. Algae are the main producers in the ocean.

Consumers

Organisms that eat other organisms are called consumers. They cannot use the sun's energy to make food like producers do. Instead, consumers eat producers or other animals to obtain energy. There are several kinds of consumers. A consumer that eats only plants is called a herbivore. Herbivores in the prairie include grasshoppers, prairie dogs, and blue skunk. A consumer that eats animals is called a carnivore. Carnivores in the prairie include coyotes, hawks, badgers, and owls. Consumers that eat both plants and animals are called omnivores. The chipmunk is an example of an omnivore. It eats insects, seeds, and grass seeds.

Scavengers are omnivores that eat dead plants and animals.
