Religion and Racial Capitalism Grace Tien, María Eugenia Funes, 2025-10-19 Much of the discourse around diversity equity and inclusion have encountered two blind spots First discourse in the academy and beyond have prioritized the intersectionality of race and gender but neglected the intersectionality of race and class Secondly the resurgence and now backlash to diversity equity and inclusion have largely benefited cultural and economic elites on the political left and left behind the working class This book suggests that the framework of racial capitalism can help bring attention to these gaps in part due to renewed scholarly interest in racial capitalism across academic disciplines This edited volume is largely motivated by the above gaps in academic and mainstream discourse and makes two primary contributions first we examine the unique intersection of religion and racial capitalism and second we analyze case studies of racial capitalism in country contexts outside of the U S drawing on case studies from North America South America Europe and Asia Scholars particularly historians have largely examined racial capitalism in the U S context Studies in this edited volume highlight how the challenges and manifestations of racial capitalism or the complex intertwined relationship between racial and economic inequality are not particular to America and the West Part I of the book investigates the past or origin stories of religion and racial capitalism Part II the present underscores contemporary empirical studies of religion and racial capitalism like how religious institutions have reinforced justified or even promoted racial and economic injustices Lastly Part III future presents ways forward or potential interventions in response to religion and racial capitalism New Frontiers in Contraceptive
