

CASE STUDIES

There are a great many ways of writing a case study, so starting one can be frustrating just figuring out what format to use.

For our case studies, the focus is on how in-mold labeling or in-mold decorating solved a technical or business problem in the packaging or durable products industry. There is no requirement to divulge proprietary information but do consider that your case study may be read by a potential customer. A well written case study is an excellent opportunity to show prospective customers that your company has mastered IML/IMD and can deliver cost effective results for them.

Ideally your case study should not be a long winded hard sell. It should be two or three pages and 500 – 900 words, although some tend to run longer. Use graphics to illustrate your information but don't go overboard.

IMDA has developed a final format that shows off our case studies to best advantage.

How to Structure Your Case Study

The typical case study has four parts:

1. Situation, Background or Introduction – This is the opening section that describes the reason for the case study, including the business or product line, product usage, current decoration method and market position. Here is where you set the stage for the parts to come next.
2. Problem – This section states the main problem which needs to be resolved, such as failure of the current decorating method, inadequate service life, excessive costs, etc. Previous attempts at solution that failed can also be addressed here.
3. Solution – This is the heart of the document. It describes the solution in detail, how IML or IMD solved the problem, what changes were made to the manufacturing process, the impact on the cost and end use of the product, methodologies and other factors that contributed to the overall deployment. Some case studies include sidebars, charts and graphs to illustrate key points.
4. Evaluation – In this section recap the main benefits of the solution and the impact on the product's value and function.

Rethinking the Case Study in International Business and Management Research Rebecca Marschan-Piekkari, Catherine Welch, 2011-01-01 This important and original book places the case study in international business research in its historical context critically evaluates current case study practices in the field and proposes a more pluralistic future for case research within international business and international management research While the case study is the most popular qualitative research strategy in the field only a narrow selection of possible approaches is currently used IB and IM researchers typically rely on a case study approach that could be characterized as qualitative positivism The editors and contributors look beyond this disciplinary convention and encourage greater pluralism in IB and IM case research Their key argument is that increased awareness of prevailing disciplinary conventions and their limitations increases the potential for methodological innovation and versatility in case research The contributions provide critical novel and innovative perspectives on the case study in IB and IM research The book offers inspiration to case authors and an authoritative methodological reference for those publishing and reviewing case research It will also be highly regarded by postgraduate and doctoral students in IB and IM as well as both qualitative and quantitative researchers in the field
