

Subway's Franchise System

Subway operates one of the most successful franchise systems in the world, allowing individuals to own and operate their own stores under the Subway brand. This model provides a structured framework where franchisees benefit from the brand's recognition, standardized operations, and established customer base. However, it also comes with significant costs and responsibilities.

How Subway's Franchise System Works

Subway's franchise system is based on a licensing agreement between the parent company, Doctor's Associates Inc. (DAI), and independent owners. This agreement grants franchisees the right to operate a Subway restaurant using its brand, processes, and established reputation. However, to enter the system, franchisees must meet specific financial and operational requirements.

Financial Commitments for Franchisees

Initial Franchise Fee

- The initial franchise fee for a Subway restaurant varies by location but is generally $10,000 to $15,000.
- In some regions, such as North America, the fee is $15,000 per location, while in lower-income countries, the fee may be reduced.
- Multi-unit operators may receive discounts for additional locations.

Ongoing Fees

- Royalty Fees: Subway requires franchisees to pay 8% of their gross sales as a royalty fee.
- Advertising Fees: Franchisees contribute 4.5% of gross sales to Subway's advertising fund, which covers national and regional marketing efforts.

Startup Costs

- The total investment to open a Subway franchise ranges from $207,050 to $476,900, depending on location, store size, and renovation costs.
- Major costs include leasehold improvements, store equipment, initial inventory, insurance, and business permits.
- Subway locations are relatively affordable compared to competitors like McDonald's, where startup costs can exceed $1.5 million.

Lease and Property Costs

- Many Subway franchises operate in leased spaces within shopping centers, gas stations, or stand-alone buildings.
