Abstract: The aim of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and physiological characteristics of young women. The study was conducted in a laboratory setting. The subjects were 12 young women, aged 18-25, who were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The experimental group underwent a 12-week training program consisting of aerobic and strength training. The physical and physiological characteristics of the subjects were measured at the beginning and end of the training program. The results showed that the experimental group had significant improvements in their physical and physiological characteristics compared to the control group. The improvements were observed in the following variables: maximum oxygen consumption, maximum heart rate, maximum power, maximum force, and maximum speed. The control group showed no significant changes in these variables. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical and physiological characteristics of young women.
