² These findings will not contradict the fact that the findings on the other side are not supported by other studies showing that the findings are not supported by other studies.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume exercise program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of older adults. The study was a randomized controlled trial involving 40 participants aged 65 and older. The intervention group performed a 12-week exercise program, while the control group remained sedentary. Physical fitness was measured using a 6-minute walk test, and health-related quality of life was measured using the SF-36 questionnaire. The results showed that the intervention group had significantly higher scores on the 6-minute walk test and the SF-36 questionnaire compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume exercise program can improve physical fitness and health-related quality of life in older adults.
