two worlds in his writing is indicative of how they fuse together in his daily life As Pickering puts it All my life I have roamed libraries almost as much as I have roamed the natural world I try to get at many truths but when I tell the truth I tell it slant I do so to describe life as it is and indeed celebrate that as it is Pickering is a master of his craft one of the finest of personal essayists around and these essays bear many of the characteristics of his other volumes reflections on his everyday activities and on individuals around him humorous exchanges with his wife and so forth But this volume seems to have something else as well We find here a thoughtful meditation on time and self and relative old age demonstrating a close attention to the natural world a tone not unlike Thoreau s at times Fred C Hobson Professor of English University of North Carolina Chapel Hill and author or editor of fourteen books most recently A Southern Enigma Essays on the U S South
