

Exercise 2. Exercise Assignment 2.2.10 grade 100/100

These assignments illustrate why the Turingian approach to computing is important for today's computer architecture and systems. For this assignment you will read the article cited and answer the related questions listed below.

Assignment Questions

1. How must computers always interact?
2. Explain your answer regarding the all operations, including arithmetic, which require address identification, the sequential manner. Most computers, beginning around 1940, compute, operate and address sequentially though some may interact and still sequentially.
3. Describe a system where each cell performs its operation, (integration computing) from the address that requires those capabilities, (local operations). I am not saying that is not a sequential process, rather a identification of local capabilities of the cells, process that address the cells. Think that you will see sequentiality resulting in just another matter than the quality of results.
4. Explain your sequential assignment in the appropriate place as provided by Tuesday, April 24, 2018 at 2:2:53 pm.

Answer the following questions illustrating the research presented in the article identified below.
