Antecedents and Perspectives on South African Police Service's Execution of Functions Saul Matroos Slingers,2015 The powers functions and duties of the South African Police Service SAPS are adequately and widely determined by the Constitution of the Republic of South Africa the South African Police Service Act and relevant legislation Despite the tremendous legal and other support for the police the SAPS service still appears to be bestowed with a number of internally and externally driven challenges that precipitate against actualization of the desirable pragmatic policing practice in a democratic context Given that little is empirically known through previous studies about these challenges and the extent to which they overshadow the policing mandate this study is designed to close the existing gap in knowledge The main objective of this study was to ascertain the effect of specific factors which affect the execution of police powers and functions in the South African Democratic Dispensation and the implementation of pragmatic police principles in the country It specifically investigated the effect of the pre democratic police legacy and negative police sub culture the effect of the internal systems of the SAPS on the execution of police powers and functions as well as the effect of external systems and co operation with stakeholders in the execution of police powers and functions and the implementation of pragmatic policing principles in the country In conclusion overall while it is evident that more internal compared to external factors are the greatest obstacles to the police properly executing their constitutional functions the most crucial internally driven factor is the proper administration and management of the service and the most crucial externally driven factor is the political interference in the management and administration of the service respectively This study therefore recommends that in regard to the influence of pre constitutional police legacy and negative police sub culture refresher courses on policing in a democratic society should be instituted and a process must be put in place where members of the service can without fear of intimidation report corruption and derelictions of colleagues victimization and police peer pressure to the SAPS management In regard to the internal obstacles the recommendations are that the SAPS management as a matter of preference must attend to the recruitment enlistment appointment and promotion processes of the service As far as the political interference in the management and administration of the service is concerned the recommendation is that Political Science or an Introduction to Political Science be a compulsory subject in the Executive Development Leadership Programme for Senior Managers in the SAPS to place them in a position to understand and properly deal with matters of political interference in the management and control of the SAPS
