Green History Thomas S. Martin, 2000 In Western culture domination and hierarchy are evident in three principal ways the oppression of people by other people the oppression of women by men and the oppression of nature by human beings Combining perspectives from anarchist feminist and ecological movements in addressing these three tyrannies Green philosophy has the potential to constitute the basis of any post Western worldview that renounces domination and hierarchy including those that inform the writing and teaching of history Although books on historiography and historical method are legion few start from a Green or post Western perspective In Green History Tom Martin follows up his Greening of the Past with a thought provoking examination of the basic assumptions underlying Western historical thought from a Green standpoint Martin argues that Western historiography and historical method are fundamentally flawed and that our entire view of the past needs rethinking He offers a cogent critique of Western historiography and suggestions on possible directions for Green methodology narrative and focus Provocative and insightful Green History is a timely work that will engage historians interested in the future of their discipline

Green Land, Brown Land, Black Land James McCann, 1999 This text confronts the alarm about degradation of Africa's natural and human resources by examining two centuries of historical evidence of environmental change It presents African landscapes as created by humans not as some idealized notion of Eden Key topics covered include the effects of population growth disease agricultural change the state of natural resources and the role of the state in how Africans have managed and changed their own landscapes North America Heinemann

Green Colonialism in Zimbabwe, 1890-1980 Vimbai Chaumba Kwashirai, 2014-05-14 This book examines the debates and processes on woodland exploitation in Zimbabwe during the colonial era 1890-1960 It explores the social economic and political contexts of perceptions on woodland distribution and management Much of the period was characterized by both local and global debates about environmental problems generating in their wake politically charged and emotive language about the consequences deforestation soil erosion and threats to wildlife This study analyses the history of exploitation and conservation of the Zimbabwean teak mkusi or Baikiea plurijuga and its associated species in Northwestern Matabeleland from 1890 to 1960 Timber exploitation was among the top three colonial economic activities in Matabeleland including ranching and tobacco cultivation Concessionaire capitalists and forestry officials dominated the exploitation and conservation of the Zambezi teak woodland or gusu respectively On one hand capitalists sought to extract as much commercial hardwood timber as they could while on the other hand foresters restricted tree felling In this first critical work on the topic author Vimbai Kwashirai focuses on woodland conservation and commercial development in Zimbabwe during the colonial period Emphasis is placed on the tensions conflicts and sometimes the collusions between timber companies and the developing state This book provides a rich example of Green Imperialism along the lines of Richard Grove but goes beyond that by giving an economic historical account that situates conservation history within the broader political economic context This book is based on broad archival research and it traces the relationship between conservation and the development of commercial capital from forest enterprises in colonial Zimbabwe It delivers much insight on the conflicts and tensions of the workings of the British South Africa Company a capitalist enterprise that was at the same time overseeing the development of a state polity of the then Rhodesia providing evidence for a strong argument for the development of industrial capital under colonialism The forestry service was caught in these tensions of supporting and enterprise but also trying to regulate that green capital and establish the beginnings of protected forests in Zimbabwe This book casts much light on the environmental impact on a part of Africa caused by the push and pull of politics and economics This book will be an important addition to collections in African studies environmental studies and political science Comparative Politics of the Global South December Green,Laura Luehrmann,2022-07-15
