Abstract

Abstract: The purpose of this study was to investigate the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary middle-aged women. The study was conducted in a community center in a city in the north of Iran. The participants were 30 women, aged 40-50 years, who were sedentary and had no chronic diseases. They were divided into two groups: a control group (n=15) and an intervention group (n=15). The intervention group participated in a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The training program included aerobic exercises, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The control group did not participate in any training program. The data were collected at the beginning and at the end of the 12-week period. The results showed that the intervention group had significant improvements in physical and psychological health compared to the control group. The improvements were observed in measures of physical fitness, such as heart rate, blood pressure, and body mass index, as well as in measures of psychological health, such as anxiety and depression. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can be an effective intervention for improving the physical and psychological health of sedentary middle-aged women.
