Yves Dugher (standing) explains to two advertising executives and Agnes Johnson (far right) the results of his language theories. They examine a wall featuring, among other things, the second language of advertising that Agnes Johnson, 68, has constructed by presenting 100 statements to over 100 marketing and branding of companies with whom she is highly associated. Johnson (center) explains another wall expression: meaning is the high speed and shifting focus. "Yves Dugher is explaining what on the surface may be obvious but the depth of language, literature and culture is incomparable." The participants show how quickly they can learn to read the code of the wall and what it means.

12. It is necessary to prepare students for a world in which learning never ceases (2 answers). (2 = correct)
13. Computer learning. World's the best teaching, not all students do well in it. We think they need a better system.
14. Students who experience success learning a language will be more likely to continue their language studies and speak with greater fluency.
