

3.3 Transmit Checksum Generation Example

The following section covers an example of transmit packet routing in the PA for a non-encrypted data packet. This shows one example of routing transmit packets through the PA to the gigabit Ethernet (GbE) switch subsystem. The packet originates from the host, and will be sent to the modify/multiroute engine for an UDP checksum before being sent out over the network.

This example assumes that the packet has MAC, IPv4, and UDP headers, and shows the modify/multiroute engine 0 being used to generate the UDP checksum.

1. Host processor generates a packet and pushes it into transmit queue 644 for modify/multiroute engine 0.
2. The NETCP transmit packet DMA pops the descriptor from the transmit queue, and transfers the packet data to modify/multiroute engine 0.
3. After the transfer completes, the NETCP transmit packet DMA pushes the transmit descriptor onto the transmit completion queue. When the PA modify/multiroute engine 0 receives the packet, it calculates an L4 checksum and inserts it into the packet.
4. The modify/multiroute engine transfers the packet to port 0 of the gigabit Ethernet switch.
5. The gigabit Ethernet switch transfers the packet out port 1 to SGMII0.
6. SGMII0 transmits the packet over the wire.
