challenges in the business world never stop escalating as today's customers are more difficult to satisfy, company's products are easily copied and technology is changing rapidly. Outsourcing is becoming more popular in today's business as companies have limited resources to become the best in every business process. However, not all outsourcing is successful. The initial intention to save costs may result in increasing costs if outsourcing activities are not extensively planned. The intention of this monograph is simple as the writers intend to introduce a good practice of relational oriented exchange that will lead to better outsourcing performance. It is hoped to address issues surrounding customer demand and market competition which is found to affect the relational oriented exchange and outsourcing success.
