2. Use designated parts only

The unit's components possess important safety characteristics, such as noncombustibility and the ability to tolerate surge voltages. Be sure that replacement parts possess the same safety characteristics as the originals. Also remember that the (R) mark, which appears in circuit diagrams and parts lists, denotes components that have particularly important safety functions. Be sure to use only the designated components.

3. Always follow the original design when mounting parts and routing wires

The original layout includes various safety features, such as insulation of insulating materials (rubber and tape) and the mounting of parts above the printed board. In addition, internal wiring has been tested and changed as so to keep it away from hot or high-voltage parts. When mounting parts or routing wires, therefore, be sure to duplicate the original layout.

4. Inspect after completing service

After servicing, inspect to make sure that all screws, components, and wiring have been returned to their original condition. Also check the area around the repair location to ensure that repair work has caused no damage, and confirm safety.

5. When replacing chip components...

Never touch components. Also remember that the negative side of sensitive components is easily damaged by heat.

6. When handling flexible printed boards...

- The temperature of the soldering-iron tip should be about 270°C.
- Do not apply the tip more than three times to the same points.
- Handle patterns with care; never apply force.

Caution: Remember that hard disk drives are easily damaged by vibration. Always handle with care.
