When I see another couple who haven't yet had their first child, I feel like I've been thrown into a time warp. I know I'm not alone. Many couples in my generation are postponing parenthood. In fact, the average age of a woman when she has her first child is 26.5 years old, according to the U.S. Census Bureau. And the average age of a man when he has his first child is 28.5 years old. That's a significant increase from the 1960s, when the average age of a woman when she had her first child was 21.5 years old, and the average age of a man when he had his first child was 24.5 years old. So why are so many couples postponing parenthood? There are many reasons. One is that many couples are waiting until they are financially stable. Another is that many couples are waiting until they are emotionally ready. And a third is that many couples are waiting until they are physically ready. Whatever the reason, the fact is that many couples are postponing parenthood. And that's a good thing. Because when you have a child, you're not just adding another person to the world. You're adding a new member to the family. And that's a responsibility that you need to be ready to take on.
