Primary drive system

Timing chains are used to transfer drive from the crankshaft to the double overhead camshafts.

When viewed from the front the right hand camshafts are driven by the timing chain drive system. These camshafts then drive the respective second camshaft through chain sprocket fitted to the front of the VCT phasers.

The outer most camshafts are the "hot side" (exhaust) camshafts whilst the inner most camshafts are the "cold side" (intake) camshafts. The camshafts displace the valves through rockers and lash adjustment shims. Each valve is actuated via the movement of a rocker, this follows the profile of the camshaft lobe, thus transferring the angular rotation into the required reciprocating motion for valve opening and closing. Lash adjustment shims required to compensate for any tolerance variations in the system. Each timing chain has a hydraulic tensioner which is operated by engine oil pressure. The timing chains are lubricated with engine oil via the timing chain oil jets (not shown).

The water pump and engine oil pump are driven by the engine via additional drive shafts.
