Cerebral Aneurysms H.W. Pia,C. Langmaid,J. Zierski,2012-12-06 Microsurgery has brought about important changes and progress in the treatment of cerebral aneurysms in recent years Only 12 years ago McKissock one of the most experienced surgeons in the treatment of aneurysms compared the results of operative and nonoperative treatment He found that mortality and morbidity of cerebral aneurysms was not significantly affected by whether the patients have been operated upon or not This view is held by many neurosurgeons and was confirmed by results of the Cooperative Study in 1969 In the review on treatment of aneurysms in Progress in Neurological Surgery in 1969 techniques such as encasement with plastic compounds picroinjection stereotactic copper or electric thrombosis and metallic thrombosis and profound hypothermia in anaesthesia were listed In general these techniques now seem to be of little more than historical interest Progress in recent years has been so enormous that one may perhaps gain the impression that the main problems in the treatment of aneurysms have been solved and that there are no more to be surmounted This is dangerous and complacent thinking such as Lord Moynihan indulged in during the thirties For this reason we thought that the time had come to assemble a group of experts who could discuss the various unsolved and controversial problems of aneurysm surgery in the friendly and relaxed atmosphere of a workshop
