The Ranchman, the Original Classic Western Novel Charles Alden Seltzer, 2015-03-30 The air in the Pullman was hot and despite the mechanical contrivances built into the coach to prevent such a contingency the dust from the right of way persisted in filtering through crevices Even the electric fans futilely combated the heat their droning hum bespoke terrific revolutions which did not materially lessen the discomfort of the occupants of the coach and the dry dead dust of the desert the glare of a white hot sun the continuing panorama of waste land rolling past the car windows afforded not one cool vista to assuage the torture of travel For hours after leaving Kansas City several of the passengers had diligently gazed out of the windows But when they had passed the vast grass plains and had entered the desert where their eyes met nothing but endless stretches of feathery alkali dust beds of dead lava and clumps of cacti with thorny spire and spatula blade defiantly upthrust as though in mockery of all life the passengers drew the shades and settled down in their seats to endure the discomfort of it all

The Trail Horde, the Original Classic Western Novel Charles Alden Seltzer, 2015-03-31 There were fifty thousand acres within view of the ranchhouse virgin grass land dotted with sage running over a wide level into little hills and so on to an upland whose rise was so gradual that it could be seen only from a distance best from the gallery of the ranchhouse The first tang of autumn was in the sage scented breeze that swept the county and the tawny valley basking in the warm sunlight that came down from a cloudless sky showed its rugged beauty to advantage Kane Lawler paused at the edge of the gallery and filled his lungs from the sage laden breeze and then wheeled to face his mother She smiled at him Have you seen Ruth Hamlin lately Kane Lawler s lips opened then closed again tightly And by that token Mrs Lawler knew that something Kane had been on the point of saying never would be said For she knew her son as no other person in the country knew him Kane Lawler was big From the broad shoulders that bulged the gray flannel shirt down the yellow corduroy trousers that encased his legs to the tops of the boots with their high heels and dull roweled spurs Lawler looked what he was a man who asked no favors of his kind

Charles Alden Seltzer Western Combo Volume II Charles Alden Seltzer,2015-03-30 Firebrand Trevison The Trail to Yesterday The Boss of the Lazy Y Charles Alden Seltzer Masterpiece Collection Charles Alden Seltzer Western Combo Volume III Charles Alden Seltzer,2015-03-30 The Trail Horde Square Deal Sanderson The Ranchman the Range Boss Charles Alden Seltzer Masterpiece Collection Charles Alden Seltzer Western Combo Volume I Charles Alden Seltzer,2015-03-30 Drag Harlan The Two Gun Man The Coming of the Law Charles Alden Seltzer Masterpiece Collection The Two Gun Man, the Original Classic Western Novel Charles Alden Seltzer,2015-03-31 From the crest of Three Mile Slope the man on the pony could see the town of Dry Bottom straggling across the gray floor of the flat its low squat buildings looking like so many old boxes blown there by an idle wind or unceremoniously dumped there by a careless fate and left regardless to carry out the scheme of desolation Apparently the rider was in no hurry for as the pony topped the rise and the town burst suddenly into view the little animal pricked up its ears and quickened its pace only to feel the reins suddenly tighten and to hear the rider s voice gruffly discouraging haste Therefore the pony pranced gingerly alert champing the bit impatiently picking its way over the lumpy hills of stone and cactus but holding closely to the trail The man lounged in the saddle his strong well knit body swaying gracefully his eyes shaded by the brim of his hat narrowed with slight mockery and interest as he gazed steadily at the town that lay before him I reckon that must be Dry Bottom he said finally mentally taking in its dimensions If that s so I ve only got twenty miles to go Half way down the slope and still a mile and a half from the town the rider drew the pony to a halt He dropped the reins over the high pommel of the saddle drew out his two guns one after the other rolled the cylinders and returned the guns to their holsters He had heard something of Dry Bottom s reputation and in examining his pistols he was merely preparing himself for an emergency For a moment after he had replaced the weapons he sat quietly in the saddle Then he shook out the reins spoke to the pony and the little animal set forward at a slow lope of the Law The Ranchman The Two Gun Man Square Deal Sanderson The Trail Horde The Range Boss, the Original Classic Western Novel Charles Alden Seltzer, 2015-04-24 Getting up the shoulder of the mesa was no easy job but judging from the actions and appearance of wiry pony and rider it was a job that would be accomplished For part of the distance it is true the man thought it best to dismount drive the pony ahead of him and follow on foot At length however they reached the top of the mesa and after a breathing spell the man mounted and rode across the table land A short lope brought pony and rider to a point where the mesa sloped down again to meet a plain that stretched for miles to merge into some foothills A faint trail came from somewhere through the foothills wound over the plain and followed a slope that descended to a river below the rider crossed the stream led over a level up another slope to another plain and so away into the distance Up and down the river the water ran deeply in a canyon the painted buttes that flanked it lending an appearance of constriction to its course but at the crossing it broadened formidably and swirled splashingly around numerous rocks that littered its course

The Coming of the Law, the Original Classic Western Novel Charles Alden Seltzer, 2015-04-25 If the passengers on the west bound train that pulled up at the little red wooden station at Dry Bottom at the close of a June day in were interested in the young man bearing the two suit cases they gave no evidence of it True they noted his departure with casual glances they watched him as he stepped down upon the platform but immediately they forgot his athletic figure and his regular featured serious face as their thoughts returned to the heat the dust and the monotony of travel There was the usual bustle and activity which always follows the arrival of a train A mail bag was dumped out of the mail car another thrown in some express packages were unceremoniously deposited near the door of the station by the agent the conductor ran to the telegrapher s window to receive an order ran back signaling as he ran the engine bell clanged the drivers clanked the wheels ground the passengers sighed and the train departed on its way The young man who had alighted stood motionless for a moment listening to the clatter of the wheels over the rail joints watching the smoke from the engine stack befoul the clear blue of the sky Then he smiled grimly threw a rapid glance toward a group of loungers standing at a corner of the station and walked over to where the station agent stood examining some newly arrived packages Do you mind directing me to the courthouse said the young man The agent looked up turned and ran a measuring speculative eye over the new arrival He noted the Eastern cut of the young man s clothing and beneath the dust of travel the clear healthy white skin of his face Stranger here observed the agent with a slight humorous narrowing of the eyes Yes No I don t mind resumed the agent answering the young man s question You won t have any trouble findin the courthouse There s only one street in this town an the courthouse is down to the other end of it you couldn t miss it if you tried He grinned with some amusement at the young man s back as the latter with a cordial thank you returned to his suit cases gripped them firmly by the handles and strode down the wooden platform toward the street ignoring the group of loungers at the corner of the station Nother tenderfoot remarked one of the loungers as the young man passed out of hearing they re runnin this country plum to hell The young man strode slowly down the board sidewalk that paralleled the buildings on one side of the street mentally taking in the dimensions of the town It was not an inviting picture Many buildings of various descriptions snuggled the wide vacant space which the station agent had termed a street Most of the buildings were unpainted and crude composed of rough boards running perpendicularly with narrow battens over the joints There were several brick buildings two stories in height bearing the appearance of having been recently erected and these towered over the squat one story frames in seeming contemptuous dignity There were many private dwellings some stores but the young man s first impression was that there was an enormous number of saloons

The Trail to Yesterday Charles Alden Seltzer,2020-08-11 Reproduction of the original The Trail to Yesterday by Charles Alden Seltzer

Square Deal Sanderson, the Original Classic Western Novel Charles Alden Seltzer,2015-03-30 An hour before Deal Sanderson had opened his eyes He had been comfortably wrapped in his blanket his head had been resting on a saddle seat His sleep over he had discovered that the saddle seat felt hard to his cheek In changing his position he had awakened His face toward the east he had seen a gray streak widening on the horizon a herald of the dawn Sanderson found what seemed to be a softer spot on the saddle snuggled himself in the blanket and went to sleep again Of course he had not neglected to take one sweeping glance around the camp while awake and that one glance had convinced him that the camp was in order

The fire had long since gone out there was a heap of white ashes to mark the spot where it had been His big brown horse Streak unencumbered by rope or leather was industriously cropping the dew laden blades of some bunch grass within a dozen yards of him and the mighty desolation of the place was as complete as it had seemed when he had pitched his camp the night before Sanderson reveled in the luxury of complete idleness He grinned at the widening streak of dawn as he closed his eyes There would be no vitriolic voiced cook to bawl commands at him this morning And no sour faced range boss to issue curt orders In an hour or so perhaps in two hours Sanderson would crawl out of his blanket get his own breakfast and ride northeastward He was a free agent now and would be until he rode in to the Double A to assume his new duties

Drag Harlan, the Original Classic Western Novel Charles Alden Seltzer,2015-03-30 From out of the shimmering haze that veiled the mystic eastern space came a big black horse bearing a rider Swinging wide to avoid the feathery dust that lay at the base of a huge sand dune the black horse loped making no sound and seeming to glide forward without effort Like a somber gigantic ghost the animal moved heroic of mold embodying the spirit of the country seeming to bear the sinister message of the desert the whispered promise of death the lingering threat the grim mockery of life and the conviction of futility The black horse had come far The glossy coat of him was thickly sprinkled with alkali dust sifted upon him by the wind of his passage through the desert his black muzzle was gray with it ropes of it matted his mane his forelock had become a gray tinged wisp which he fretfully tossed the dust had rimmed his eyes causing them to loom large and wild and as his rider pulled him to a halt on the western side of the sand dune where both horse and rider would not be visible on the sky line he drew a deep breath shook his head vigorously and blew a thin stream of dust from his nostrils With head and ears erect his eyes flaming his undying courage and his contempt for distance and the burning heat that the midday sun poured upon him he gazed westward snorting long breaths into his eager lungs

The Boss of the Lazy Y, the Original Classic Western Novel Charles Alden Seltzer,2015-03-31 Shuffling down the long slope its tired legs moving automatically the drooping pony swerved a little and then came to a halt trembling with fright Startled out of his unpleasant ruminations his lips tensing over his teeth in a savage snarl Calumet Marston swayed uncertainly in the saddle caught himself crouched and swung a heavy pistol to a menacing poise For an instant he hesitated searching the immediate vicinity with rapid intolerant glances When his gaze finally focused on the object which had frightened his pony he showed no surprise Many times during the past two days had this incident occurred and at no time had Calumet allowed the pony to follow its inclination to bolt or swerve from the trail He held it steady now pulling with a vicious hand on the reins Ten feet in front of the pony and squarely in the center of the trail a gigantic diamond back rattler swayed and warned its venomous lidless eyes gleaming with hate Calumet s snarl deepened he dug a spur into the pony s left flank and pulled sharply on the left rein The pony lunged swerved and presented its right shoulder to the swaying reptile its flesh quivering from excitement Then the heavy revolver in Calumet s hand roared spitefully there was a sudden threshing in the dust of the trail and the huge rattler shuddered into a sinuous twisting heap

For an instant Calumet watched it and then seeing that the wound he had inflicted was not mortal he urged the pony forward and leaning over a little sent two more bullets into the body of the snake severing its head from its body The Trail to Yesterday, the Original Classic Western Novel Charles Alden Seltzer,2015-04-25 Many disquieting thoughts oppressed Miss Sheila Langford as she halted her pony on the crest of a slight rise and swept the desolate and slumberous world with an anxious glance Quite the most appalling of these thoughts developed from a realization of the fact that she had lost the trail The whole categorical array of inconveniences incidental to traveling in a new unsettled country paled into insignificance when she considered this horrifying and entirely unromantic fact She was lost she had strayed from the trail she was alone and night was coming She would not have cared so much about the darkness for she had never been a coward and had conditions been normal she would have asked nothing better than a rapid gallop over the dim plains But as she drew her pony up on the crest of the rise a rumble of thunder reached her ears Of course it would rain now that she had lost the trail she decided yielding to a sudden bitter anger It usually did rain when one was abroad without prospect of shelter it always rained when one was lost Well there was no help for it of course and she had only herself to blame for the blunder For the other not unusual irritating details that had combined to place her in this awkward position she could blame first Duncan the manager of the Double R who should have sent someone to meet her at the station the station agent who had allowed her to set forth in search of the Double R without a guide though even now considering this phase of the situation she remembered that the agent had told her there was no one to send and certainly the desolate appearance of Lazette had borne out this statement and last she could blame the country itself for being an unfeathered wilderness Something might be said in extenuation of the station agent s and the Double R manager s sins of omission but without doubt the country was what she had termed it an unfeathered wilderness Her first sensation upon getting a view of the country had been one of deep disappointment There was plenty of it she had decided enough to make one shrink from its very bigness yet because it was different from the land she had been accustomed to she felt that somehow it was inferior Her father had assured her of its beauty and she had come prepared to fall in love with it but within the last half hour when she had begun to realize that she had lost the trail she had grown to hate it She hated the desolation the space the silence the arid stretches she had made grimaces at the cactuses with their forbidding pricklers though she could not help admiring them they seemed to be the only growing thing in the country capable of defying the heat and the sun Most of all she hated the alkali dust All afternoon she had kept brushing it off her clothing and clearing it out of her throat and only within the last half hour she had begun to realize that her efforts had been without result it lay thick all over her her throat was dry and parched with it and her eyes burned The Coming of the Law Charles Alden Seltzer,2015-05-09 The Coming of the Law from Charles Alden Seltzer American writer prolific author of western novels 1875 1942
