

THE CHRISTMAS GIFT

It was Christmas Eve and the store was filled with people. Annabel sat on Santa's knee. "What do you want for Christmas?" asked Santa Claus. "I want a puppy," replied Annabel smiling. She reached up to pull his beard. He leaned back saying, 'ho ho ho, don't do that, child. If you're a really good girl, you might get a puppy. But you must promise to be good and keep your promise." Annabel promised to be good and Santa gave her a wind up toy from his sack. She walked back to her mother with a smile on her face. "Look what Santa gave me," she said, holding up the little toy. "Very nice," her mother replied. "It is. It's very nice. But what I really want this Christmas, mummy, is a puppy," Annabel said. "Do you think Santa will get me a puppy?" she asked.

"I don't know Annabel, you'll have to wait and see," her mother replied. They walked home together, their coats wrapped tightly around them. The afternoon was cold and it was already getting dark. Annabel was so excited about Christmas that it was hard to sleep. She tossed and turned all night. Eventually, the sun rose and morning came. Annabel jumped out of bed and ran down the stairs. Under the Christmas tree there were dozens of presents all wrapped in coloured paper. On the paper there were little pictures of reindeers and snowmen and Santa in his sleigh. The presents were piled up very high. Annabel's parents came in behind her.
