The Credit Card Act Of 2009:

Credit Card Accountability Responsibility and Disclosure Act Oliver P. Meyer, 2013-12 The Credit Card Accountability Responsibility and Disclosure Act of 2009 CARD Act or the Act changed the landscape of the credit card market The CARD Act was enacted to establish fair and transparent practices related to the extension of credit in this market regulating both the underwriting and pricing of credit card accounts The CARD Act directs the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau to conduct a biennial review of the consumer credit card market including the effect of the Act on the cost and availability of credit and the adequacy of protections for consumers relating to credit card plans This book presents the findings of the Bureau's review and the impact of the CARD Act on the marketplace Credit CARD Act of 2009 James H. Pannabecker, 2009 Special Report James H. Pannabecker, 2009 Of provisions Detailed explanation of Truth in Lending Act changes Truth in Lending Act sections affected by the Credit CARD Act of 2009 The Credit CARD Act of 2009 Vikram Jambulapati, 2013 The Credit CARD Act of 2009 was intended to prevent practices in the credit card industry that lawmakers viewed as deceptive and abusive Among other changes the Act restricted issuers account closure policies eliminated certain fees and made it more difficult for issuers to change terms on credit card plans Critics of the Act argued that because of the long lag between approval and implementation of the law issuing banks would be able to take preemptive actions that might disadvantage cardholders before the law could take effect Using credit bureau data as well as individual data from a survey of U S consumers we test whether banks closed consumers credit card accounts or otherwise restricted access to credit just before the enactment of the CARD Act Because the period prior to the enactment of the CARD Act coincided with the financial crisis and recession causality in this case is particularly difficult to establish We find evidence that a higher fraction of credit card accounts were closed following the Federal Reserve Board's adoption of its credit card rules However we do not find evidence that banks closed credit card accounts or deteriorated terms of credit card plans at a higher rate between the time when the CARD Act was signed and when its provisions became law From the Schoolhouse to the Poorhouse Eboni S. Nelson, 2014 Whether through personal experiences or through the experiences of our friends and family most if not all of us are all too familiar with the credit card industry's aggressive attempts to burden young college students with debt that they cannot afford to repay Many students apply for and use credit cards without fully considering the negative effects credit card debt can have on their academic personal and financial wellbeing In May 2009 Congress attempted to address the problem of young consumer indebtedness by passing the Credit Card Accountability Responsibility and Disclosure Act of 2009 While this Article recognizes and applauds Congress's attempt to protect college aged consumers it questions whether the current legislation which narrowly focuses on restricting young consumers access to credit cards is the most effective way to provide this protection In light of the increased levels of young consumer credit card indebtedness and the long term negative consequences that befall many college aged consumers as a result of this debt this Article asserts that the current legislation misses an important opportunity to provide greater and more effective protection for this cohort of consumers By narrowly focusing on the availability of credit cards to college aged consumers the Credit CARD Act fails to include provisions that provide protection for young consumers once they obtain and begin to use credit cards Therefore this Article argues that more comprehensive measures are needed to help protect the financial futures of college aged consumers
